For Rebecca Oberle, entrepreneurship runs in her family. So when the construction demands in Nebraska were growing, there was no hesitation to start a concrete flat work business.

The business idea initially sparked from a conversation with a friend in 2015. Through research and determining what she could specialize in, Rebecca brought in Brandon Johnson as a co-owner to help with sales and hit the ground running in concrete flatwork. In 2019, the duo brought in their missing piece, Mike Roberts, as an additional co-owner to help manage the project details.

Jamico Construction specializes in concrete flatwork, including basic slabs, garage floors, sidewalks, driveways, large scale parking lots and highway projects, even expanding into rebar installation.

"I believe that what makes us stand out is we absolutely make everything easy for our clients. We have some of the very best people in the industry."

- Rebecca Oberle, President of Jamico Construction
Market Research
Every potential project begins with market research. Rebecca will look into what big opportunities are on the horizon and filter through them based on what her crew can do.

Sales Calls And Securing The Bid
After Rebecca has pulled plans and determined which items will be bid on, Brandon will be sent out to make the sales calls. He meets with the generals and then starts the process of placing the big and securing the project. Jamico Construction then meets with their crew to figure out how each project will be managed to the budget and what the project timeline looks like.

Project Management
Now that the project bid has been won and the crew knows what to do, Mike finalizes the details with all parties involved. Often times that means scheduling the crew and meeting with the owners of the project so they know when everyone will be on site.

Project Wrap Up
The construction crews finish their work, clean everything up and move on to their next project.

The Milstar Project - Offutt Air Force Base, Omaha Neb.

Challenge
Jamico Construction received a call regarding a very tight timeline for completing the Milstar Project at Offutt Air Force Base. Rebecca’s crews had two weeks to get the project back on track and finished for the client.

Solutions
Crews worked 16 hour days for two weeks in order to get the rebar installation done. They pulled in extra manpower to insure that the project would not be delayed any further.

Outcome
The Milstar Project was completed within Jamico Construction’s two week timeline and everyone involved with the project was impressed with their dedication and quick turnaround.
